My favorite online learning tool

My personal favorite and well-known tool for online learning has to go to YouTube. In YouTube you can find billions of videos, many of them being educational. You can find pretty much any answer on YouTube and if you are too lazy to read something online, you can just play a video that will provide you the same information, but with less effort (and most of the times, explained better). Listening to something is proven to be for many people: a better way to learn it. Some people tend to be more focused while watching something instead of reading it. There are less distractions and content creators support their points with images, examples, quotes and so on. That's why it remains my favorite and simplest way for me to learn something new.
